

translation of perceptions

sarah gibson roadig r16162
2024 4505

In the early twentieth century Swiss Psychiatrist Hermann Rorschach created the inkblot test. The inkblot test was to gain knowledge on a person through their perceptions of the imagery. This test helped psychiatrists understand their patients by observing how they approach tasks, movements, colors, emotions. Many patterns were also gathered during the time the inkblot tests were in use. Throughout time inkblot tests disappeared from the medical world due to construction and speculation people created. Despite the rumors the inkblot tests do work properly when administered by a licensed professional trained in the task.

In the early twentieth century Swiss Psychiatrist Hermann Rorschach created the inkblot test. The inkblot test was to gain knowledge on a person through their perceptions of the imagery. This test helped psychiatrists understand their patients by observing how they approach tasks, movements, colors, emotions. Many patterns were also gathered during the time the inkblot tests were in use. Throughout time inkblot tests disappeared from the medical world due to construction and speculation people created. Despite the rumors the inkblot tests do work properly when administered by a licensed professional trained in the task.

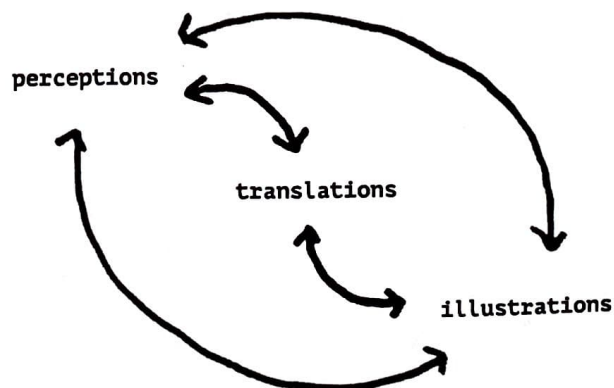

What do people see and the initial connotation that the imagery created. Finding patterns through descriptive words and emotional connotations through the imagery that the ink-blots provided.

The beginning of this research I created inkblots. Through watering down paint into an ink consistency. Following by pouring the paint on one side of a sketchbook, carefully closing it to create a symmetrical effect. Once opened and dried I transferred to digitize the blots through thresholding and color separations. Lastly setting up the survey to include ten original inkblots which was then sent out.

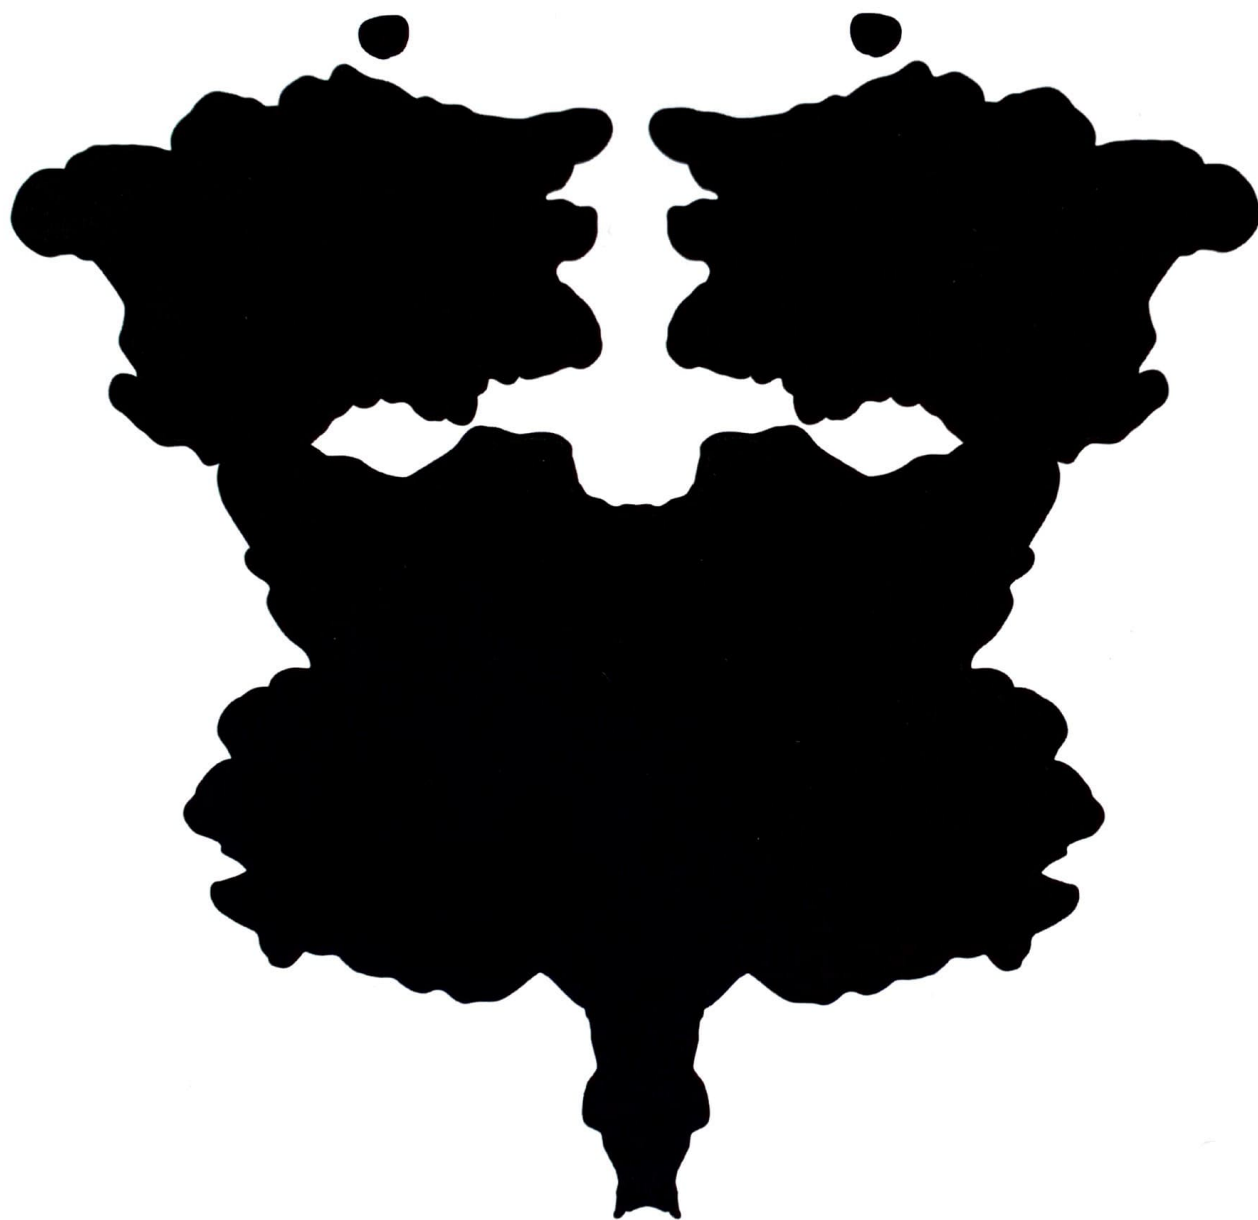

The true starting point of this work is the responses of people ranging in ages from 18-24. In the survey they were asked to say whether they think they are artistic, somewhat, or not artistic. Followed by answering the questions of "what do you see" and selected if the initial reaction was positive or negative or neutral for each one. This provides the data that is used throughout the course of the project.

With that information I was able to create drawings based on my own interpretation of other people's perceptions. This allowed me to see things in a new way as most of them varied in interpretations. Throughout this process I was able to draw connections finding patterns in what aspects of the imagery people were seeing.

The end of this process is a collection of drawings resulting from others perceptions translated by the means of my personal interpretations of the descriptions given. Through more adaptations and perceptions this project can be continuous.

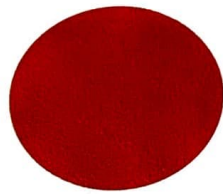

what might this be?

a mask, eyes in the center. I see a body, boobs on top, stomach and vagina on bottom. Two personified flowers about to kiss. People kissing and embracing each other. A face behind a mask. Two people hugging about to kiss. I see a continent that's slowly being split and divided symmetrically. On the bottom there's a moth flying downward, its face is on the skinnier part on the bottom. Above that are two heads facing each other on the top part. The heads have three distinct bumps towards the middle of the page, which are the nose, lips, and chin of the faces. Above everything are little dots with the top cut off, which are tired eyes with a partially closed eyelid. Two people about to kiss. Some sort of animal fur rug, maybe a cow. A mask with eye holes looking at me. Not sure about an axolotl. two people kissing. Ribs. I don't see anything on initial glance, after looking at it a bit, I see a mask with the eye holes being shaped like an upside T, and it looking similar to a classic knight's helmet. two people shoulder to shoulder about to kiss. A rib cage and pelvis. A person looking in a mirror. 2 goose heads kissing while wrapped around each other. Two giraffes kissing. It looks like a male pelvis. Dude with a mask with only eyes exposed. A big beard. Knight helmet. Two Dinosaur Ducks Kissing. Two side profiles facing each other. a crab w it's claws facing each other. The face of someone who is very tired. His eyes are almost closed and droopy. He's probably been studying for a test all day. Uterus with uterine tubes and two ovaries. Uterus. I almost see a version of some weird muppet character. So I see two eyes and a nose directly in the middle and then above are bushy eyebrows. He has no mouth and then its head kind of just sits on its chest. 2 men arguing. They have bad oral hygiene and bad opinions. They've had a hard life. Breastplate. A short sleeve bustier. A sad, slightly scared man with a huge neck beard. A dragon with its wings folded back. That's a coochie. Fog/cloud covering a torso. The white negative space at the top is like the bottom part of a candelabra and the black part is a tiger shaped fur rug and the bottom part is the tail. a uterus how did that make you feel?

negative

neutral

positive

positive